

I listen to K-LOVE which is rebroadcast on local FM translator stations 88.5, 89.1, and 89.5 in my area of Bakersfield, CA. I believe that K-LOVE is a great addition to our community, as our market is not large enough to warrant this kind of quality programming for a local Christian radio station. All quality Christian radio stations are rebroadcasts from larger markets. K-LOVE promotes love, kindness, and moral responsibility to all who listen, which has a positive influence in our community. Letting LPFM stations force them off the air would decrease the quality of programming, possibly remove the rebroadcast of Christian radio stations from our community all together. I do understand your policy of promoting localism, but it needs to be done in a way that increases our options and variety, not elimination or replacement of existing quality programming. Isn't there some middle ground where LPFM station can get licensed easier without forcing existing rebroadcast stations off the air?
